An income share agreement (ISA) is a way students can pay for their education after high school. A student promises a share of their future income for a fixed number of years in exchange for money now. For example, a student might sign an ISA offered by a college or bootcamp program requiring them to repay 5% of their income for 10 years in exchange for $10,000 in tuition payments now. Note that an ISA is not a loan and is distinct from income-based repayment.

What is your familiarity with ISAs?

Please check all that apply.

- Had not heard of ISAs before today. (1)
- Have heard of ISAs but don't know anyone who has used them (2)
- Attended a school or program that offered ISAs (3)
- Know someone who used an ISA to pay for school (4)
- Have used ISAs myself to pay for school (5)
- Other (please specify) (6)_____ [Other]

When I'm comparing financing options (for a house, car, school, etc.), the most important factor is:

- The interest rate value (e.g., 5%) (1)
- The interest rate stability (i.e., fixed or variable) (2)
- The dollar amount of the payments (3)
- The size of the payments relative to my income (4)
- Whether I can pause my payments without penalty (5)
- Whether my debt will be forgiven if I declare bankruptcy (6)
- How many years I will be repaying (7)
- The maximum amount I might repay (8)
- Whether there are penalties for paying it off quickly (9)
- Other (please specify) (10)_____ [Other]

Currently, doctors can only see patients in states where they have a license. This rule applies to visits that take place in-person and using telehealth. This rule exists to make it easier for states to investigate doctors who provide poor medical care. Some people think doctors should be allowed to provide telehealth visits with patients in any state, so patients have more options about which doctors they see.

What do you think?

- Doctors should only provide telehealth to patients in states where they have a license (1)
- Doctors should be able to provide telehealth to patients in any state (2)
